

MAJOR IN MUSIC (B.M.), COMPOSITION CONCENTRATION

The Bachelor of Music (B.M.), Composition Concentration is a professional undergraduate degree program designed to prepare students to compose original music for various genres, including symphonic works, chamber music, electronic music, and media music. Coursework emphasizes comprehensive musicianship throughout the curriculum with emphasis on individualized study in music composition.

Students receive six semesters of applied composition lessons and specialized training in arranging, orchestration, electronic music production, and music analysis. The degree culminates with a student composition recital and the completion of a senior thesis in the form of a major work for orchestra or another large ensemble.

Concentration-Level Learning Objectives

1. Compose original music in a style consistent with current trends in contemporary art music and related fields, including music for visual media.
2. Score music that is effective for the performing media employed in the student's compositions, including but not limited to solo and chamber music, music for standard large ensembles such as orchestra, chorus, and wind ensemble, and electronic/electroacoustic works.
3. Produce musical scores in keeping with current professional standards and demonstrate an understanding of traditional and contemporary notation practice.
4. Produce fully realized performances and/or recordings of original compositions for various media and/or performers.
5. Demonstrated competency using music technology including digital audio workstations, music notation software, MIDI applications, and recording/live audio hardware.
6. Demonstrate an understanding of the rights and responsibilities a composer has in the performance, publication, and distribution of his/her works including intellectual property rights for musicians.
